MAPPING PRINTMAKING | Work in Progress World Book

Introduction

The “Mapping Printmaking” project consists of a work in progress on a digital book that compiles hundreds of artists in the printmaking field in the world.

All the traditional engraving techniques are covered, such as Metal Engraving, Linocut, Woodcut, Monoprint, Lithography, Photo Engraving, Mixed Engraving Techniques, etc..., etc..., but also Digital Print and, more or less Conceptual Installation that clearly refers to the printmaking land-scape.

This digital project will be online for a period of at least 10 years, but it is intended that it will continue for longer and could give rise to other projects, namely an International Biennial of Graphic Work in the virtual space of the internet and others.

More than a mere compilation book of artists in the field of Printmaking, this project aims to give greater emphasis to Graphic Work in the context of Contemporary Art, with one of its main objectives being the dissemination of international projects that can work in a network, providing contacts, carrying out partnerships, promoting exchanges, events, workshops and other more or less physical or virtual projects.

In a digital era like the one we live in, in which the world revolves around a global space, it makes perfect sense to focus on this vast universe, developing projects in this virtual world that are similar to the speed of the internet. In this sense, “Mapping Printmaking” will be able to register an absolutely unequivocal presence on the world of Graphic Work, artists, techniques, as well as on their aesthetic productions in each period of their artistic careers, thus making their work known and pro-moted throughout the world.

Although there is nothing so original about creating a book that records this vast artistic ac-tivity in the world of printmaking, it leaves no doubt that in a certain way it will be a pioneering project, due to the dimension it intends to give, the artistic quality, the contemporary design and graphic quality, but fundamentally due to a great ambition in terms of the results that we intend to obtain with this launch on a global scale.

As it is an ongoing project, with no deadline to finish, it is an open work, always being up-dated, both in terms of number of artists, graphic works, and countries represented. For this reason, we can consider it to be a book in an “expanded field”, because, like the Graphic Work in the artistic context, it is constantly changing, constantly receiving new determinants that shape its structure and scope, therefore being one of the most significant and relevant aspects of “Mapping Printmaking”.

This Project tries also to develop the study of the relations between the traditional and the contemporary engraving in the context of the contemporary art. In this perspective, it investigates the transformations of the etching through the history of art and its contributions in response to the tech-nological changes and to the stimulus from other subjects.

From the approach of a parallel between the traditional engraving and its hybrid derivatives, with special attention to photographic and digital processes, contrasting with mediation strategies of the museums and art events since its modern formation, this project indicates notes, dialogues and possible challenges to its autonomy and livelihood nowadays. It also seeks to produce a network of relationships among engraving artists, their productions and the world of art, questioning the concepts and perceptions of this difficult relationship, pointing out convergent principles for action and new mediation strategies for printmaking, in a context of masses and of a global art industry. To this end, it examines the practices of the artists and their contemporary artworks.

The fluidity of the disciplinary boundaries and the disruption of rigid stereotypes and gener-alizations that characterized the engraving has significantly expanded its field, projecting it into a reality that must be urgently clarified. Here is a great contribution.

As we saw, the break with traditional engraving reaches its apogee with the scope of photo-mechanical processes; engraving events incorporate the concept of multiple. In this way, the artistic production of engraving approached the characteristic of loss of the “aura” pointed out by Walter Benjamin, mainly because it houses works that fit into the concept of multiple, through photographic and digital processes. For this reason, it makes perfect sense to rethink engraving based on these changes and reflect on the dialogues and strategies that new productions present in the light of dis-cussions about art.

In conclusion, without compromising a definitive conclusion that should only be made in a more in-depth assessment and after several years have passed and results have been obtained, we can assure that, with greater or lesser preponderance in the world of the Graphic Art, “Mapping Printmaking” will be a project that will certainly contribute to a greater projection and visibility of Graphic Work in the universe of Contemporary Art in the world

THE PRINTMAKING TODAY

Challenges, dialogues and mediation strategies

Probably everyone has already made a printmaking. Who has not left his footprints on the wet sand of a beach, played with stamps or scratched a crayon on a sheet with a coin below? Or even drew with graphite the texture of a leaf to the paper? Or even printed a digital photo of his baby son?

These and several other examples that can be performed by any person everyday, helps to demonstrate how the printmaking is present in our daily lives, even without perception that we are producing it or using it. It can be a conventional printmaking, in which we only transfer the texture of a surface to the paper, or a digital one in which we print a photographic picture to the paper, in both situations; we can say that we are making prints.

Printing, seems to be something easy and a commonplace as making an impression requires gestures so simple and so basic materials such as clay, the hand, pigments, molds, cuts, corrosions, and so on. The word print covers so many practices and results that we can discover many printing processes in ancient times, such as the prehistoric engravings, the dinosaurs that left impressions in clay or just any fossil.

In fact, engraving is not restricted to think on paper, press, matrix, but we should have a wider thought, for example, think of a contact that leads to the possibility of another way, a gesture that responds to another and this answer modifies and opens up, as if it were a thought, thinking engraving, as thinking drawing.

The thought cannot be described as thinking of engraving, but as engraving of thought, having the same plasticity, fluency and consistency of the movements in the engraving process.

As you can see, the complexity of the engraving processes, on printing items, contact, matrix, material, picture, are not only of retinal, technical, material or of materializing order, it leaves us in suspense about any rushed conclusion on this matter, by giving preference to a superficial look on what the print raises, going no deeper and understanding the physical and timeless horizons in its scope.

The wing of a dragonfly can be the fossilization most distant in time, but can also be connected with an overlay of contemporary features. An image can be exposed in a contradictory time in the same surface.

The different levels of our thoughts are also overlapping, as in the idea of anachronism that we work in the print sheets.

Looking at art as a thought engraving or as an engraving-thought and not wants to guide it to a purpose is an attempt to understand it through its plans. The print consists of several experiences: passages, stratum, artist proofs, unique pieces, color proofs, transfers, thoughts, feelings, impregnations, excavation, cracks, absences, shapes, cut-outs, distances, subtle, intense, overwhelming, velvety, sharp and a great multitude of many other contacts. The experience in printing becomes an experience, which creates an experience of tactile sensations and thoughts. What happens between the space of a surface and the matrix is a sort of entry of forces in the form of etching or engraving-thought. The perception of these forms produces new forces again. Thus, there must be a way of coming up the forms, a film, a plan or a skin where the energy of the pictures movement can flow.

All this complexity that the print (so simple in concept) causes expanded its action, becoming therefore an open work. It is in this way of thinking that new media can add and help to maintain the printing autonomy in the context of contemporary art. Despite the disapproval of some and the consent of others, the constructive dialogue or its total absence, the art of printmaking does not stop and continues its fearless and serene ride, dragging all their sponsored institutions. In fact, if the relationship between printmaking and photography, has motivated anger and discontent of many, today, in the XXI century, the hybridism of printmaking with other media intensified and caused new seizures and frictions undoubtedly even greater than before. The result from this were new types of printmaking, designs coming from offset printing, the urban printing, the multimedia installations, the digital computer compositions and printed on ordinary printers, the use of programs and software such as Photoshop or Corel Draw.

By combining today with these new digital media, consequently resulting new visual experiences with renewed potential for printmaking. Its matrix which was once made of metal, wood or stone, now acquires insubstantial characteristics of digital representation and the pixel of the image replaces the point, the line and the shadow printed by the physical action of the printer, or by alchemical means of acids and varnishes, integrating virtual images in computerized programs, leaving the paper, out of the process. The result of these media symbioses can take the form of installations, digital images, web art, among others.

This new contemporary reality promoted in printmaking, the passage of the graphic visual image, printed in paper to a virtual visual image that exists primarily on computer monitors. This transition to the virtual is a bit drastic, because it transits from the weight of the ink and paper's atom to the weight of virtual images, to the virtual of bits and pixels, from the material to the energy and this is, in fact, a drastic change.

The printmaking artist today, in a sense, is faced with the virtual that is presented as an apparently rectangular window (the computer screen), as a new version of the pictorial space, but that is not, since the processing elements, the handling of the plastic parts, the dimensions that are involved go far beyond the two dimensions of the white page of the paper and the individual using these new media is faced with truly unexpected situations. This "lightness" in creative expression, without material, gives to the experimentalist creation a registry key to its strong contemporary times, reminding automatically the spaces of the "empty" and approaching its operational in between, the concepts of "Open Work" Umberto Eco, or the paradigmatic concepts of the contemporary art theorized by Rosalind Krauss who tells us of that conquest of the art of the empty space and the lack of work.

This new digital picture invades our everyday culture, expressing its avant-garde in museums and galleries of contemporary art, in the urban areas in the form of public art and in biennials and dedicated to it, being alive and in constant transformation, as it was always in its history. It shows up as "open work" again, not by closing its confrontations in itself and always allowing the artist or the spectator to innovate and to improve new possibilities in its dialectic. This operative revolution, in which the printmaking survives, conquering new spaces for contemporary issue, is contrary to those who annihilate it and call it, unfairly, as a minor art. Maybe they do not realize its crucial contribution in the history of art and of mankind, so they see it just like that craft art at the service of the press, not understanding or knowing the steps it has taken toward its autonomy.

It appears then that the world of printmaking has always highlighted the changing of the graphic printing process throughout the history of art, sometimes nearer the traditional prints, sometimes more distant and in deep rupture. As shown, by analyzing the most important print works and its evolution to the present day, it outlined a path towards a move that expands its boundaries, not in a subversive way, but consistent with its need of autonomy and livelihoods while living art. The big challenge for the printmaking, either traditional or hybrid, is therefore in keeping alive the historical conditions of its genesis, without renouncing to the changes dictated by the evolution of the history of art, self-valuing with these contemporary contributions. Only then, it can claim an important role similar to that of the other languages.

The artists and the institutions do not have to follow an imposed code. People change, the world changes, the worldview changes and the art adapts to the changes and gives its contribution to improving the world and the society, the man inside and also out-side. This enhancement of sensitivity is an open project, which does not need to follow a specific code, nor is so dependent on artistic languages or technical issues.

Today in art we face new processes of industrial and electronics production of massive international movement and, consequently, new kinds of reception and appropriation. To the extent that the growing domination of man over those endless media, operates a change in man himself and in the perception of what he produces. The key is, then in the process of selecting and interpreting the information.

The Events and the art biennials can provide this key, the interface between the scholarly and the everyday knowledge. This key can materialize through clearer information to different audiences on aspects related to the messages of art exhibited, the fundamentals of the chosen topics, the controversies and political, social and cultural relevancies raised for their actions in society, by the use of new audiovisual technologies which penetrate more easily in public less alert and eager for more interactive stimuli.

The dialogue with the art goes beyond the experimental exercise, becoming an aesthetic pleasure in the life of man, in the way that if someone can be educated through art, because it can make us better people and show that there are many worlds beyond our navel. In this sense, it is essential for greater public information, finding ways to match their understanding, not answering questions with more questions, conduct public meetings with information of the artists explain and justify the reason for the choices and mainly, to return to the public the opportunity to rediscover the wonder, the perception that comes from the contemplation of an object that reconciled the perfection of the form with the perfection of the idea.

Today we need the exercise of admiration, of the empathy. Something very different from the noise and the banality of everyday life, the easy and disposable solutions of the "shopping centre" culture.

Finally, invite local artists to mingle with artists from abroad to a mutual understanding, have a concern with the social and socializing issue not only for the organizers but also for art producers: the artists and their interaction with the public.

All these considerations are attempts to understand our world so fragmented and the role of the art biennials should be in my point of view, precisely in this line of the overall decoding of art and the complexity of the contemporary societies.

If we now establish a transposition of these considerations to the field of engraving and in relation to the events and institutions that make it mediatised, it seems to me quite inadvisable, not to say unreasonable, to try to maintain a glass bell jar around the purist concepts that are characteristic of it in its historical genesis. In my opinion, this attitude has been one of the main reasons for the (unfair) disregard that engraving has suffered in the context of contemporary art. This obsession of some artists, in connivance with some events and institutions, of keeping engraving in a certain way immune and untouchable to the inevitable advancement of art history, with its inevitable contaminations and hybridisms, has thrown engraving into an erased panorama, without protagonism condemning it to a never-returning memory of a distant past.

Without wanting to annihilate the technical rigor that is particularly familiar to engraving, and aware that preserving tradition is also a form of affirming contemporary values, we must not, however, allow attitudes imbued with some fundamentalism to appropriate the fate of this ancient art. Whether markedly by the defense of tradition, or by breaking with its basic principles, deliberately subverting its technical origins, both trends are valid and constitute an important contribution in the context of contemporary art. If we think that painting as a technique has suffered identical distortions in its history, which have led to languages as diverse as installation, performance or body-art, even advocating its death; if we think that sculpture was transformed and gave rise to such subversive attitudes as "ready-made", "póvera art" and "land-art", we can better understand and accept, naturally, that engraving was not static and that it also gave origin of new graphic languages, such as lithography, screen printing, photogravure and in an even more revolutionary context, digital art and urban graphics. Furthermore, as discussed, the mutation and hybridisms of engraving were at the genesis of the transformations carried out in art, also in relation to the other techniques mentioned above.

From this perspective, it does not make much sense to consider that the mediation strategies that must be considered in relation to engraving must be different from other pictorial techniques. On the contrary, it must occupy the same space without distinction, thus marking a position of equality and importance equivalent to that of the other arts. If the major international events and the main contemporary art institutions have not removed traditional techniques such as painting, sculpture and engraving from coexistence with new trends and more dominant languages such as video art and installation, it is not at all coherent, the departure from new trends in engraving in the competitions dedicated to it. Even more so, when this exaggeratedly technocratic conduct manifests itself from a perspective of intolerance, marginalizing itself, perhaps unconsciously, from the contemporary assumptions that characterize our society and, as a consequence, condemning its cultural intervention to an achievement out of time and as such, outdated.

Without presenting a conclusion too objective, a task almost impossible in terms of art, without finding a formula to solve the issues raised, it seems to me that it is necessary a reflection about printmaking in an expanded way, pointing out several perspectives to the livelihood and the autonomy of the printmaking as a traditional technique, but also about the advantages of it combines with other languages. It is precisely in the balancing on this line of confrontation and through the "juggling" of creative artists, that the printmaking can find its circus and project itself without ambiguity or inferiority in the context of the contemporary art

"Topographies of the Wall"

This is a series of works that I worked on for many years and in different media. It begins with my trip to Berlin where I was able to appreciate the importance of the wall for the expression of different messages. From there I began to think about this series of works in which I try to express my own ideas and feelings or those taken from the everyday reality that impacts us. This is a bit of the meaning of the series but we must also add the walls or interior walls that we build in our psyche to prevent us from seeing or feeling certain sensations that disturb us."

Judy is included in the accompanying publication The Found Line and video. I create artist books, printmaking, sculpture and textiles. I have been working with water based monotype prints for about 20 years. The latest series of prints have been about water, being immersed in water, sun shining through water, sea creatures and grasses under water. I swim in a rock pool (ocean) every day. I have also recently taken an interest in commercial packaging; the design, the problems of disposal and the interaction with the environment. I am also interested in obsolete electronic components. I work in the Barracks Art Studios Thirroul, in the Illawarra Region, on the South Coast of NSW, Australia.

Infinity Pool Series

"In the water I have no edges. I am one with the water, the sea, the ocean, the earth, the world, the universe. My daily swims in the ocean rock pool and the surf provide endless images of water, light, spray, weeds, snails, fish, molluscs, sand, rocks, refracted and reflected light, cloudy, and sunny, bright and dull, foamy and flat, and sometimes rough. My daily swims are what makes me each day. It's where I create my images, meditate, make the big decisions and sort out problems as well as being part of a unique beach/rock pool community. This print reflects my vision from the water surface to infinity."

“Passing Clouds 1V (Sunrise), 2019 is a response to the ever-changing and transient qualities in nature. The cycles in the day and the passing of time are suggested through the experienced phenomena both of day break and evening. The ever-changing interplay of the elements and the layers in the atmosphere are reflective of living in our current time of instability, uncertainty and fragility.”

"This drypoint etching is made on a zinc metal plate with a hard needle. The line is sometimes made softer, sometimes with more press. But the goal was to create und to complete the line without a stop as long as possible. And during the movement on the plate to find a rhythm and at the end "find together".

I do not see use the technique of woodblock for the sake of reproducibility, but only because certain image inventions can only be achieved with this very technique. Consequently, I usually produce single sheets, unique pieces that are expanded into series by adding new printing plates or changing, revising or omitting printing plates already in use. Woodcut thus becomes a method of creating or representing transitions, progressions and dynamic processes in the sense of a series of images.

Sonja Hinterreiter

Sonja Hinterreiter was born 1955 in Upper Austria. She first came into contact with art during her studies to become a teacher, where she learned (next to German) visual education under Wolfgang and Georg Stifter from 1975 to 1978. Sonja discovered her love for woodcuts and sculptural designs already during that time, in 1977.

Under the guidance of Leslie de Melo in 1995 and 1996, she was able to further refine her skillset. Surrounded by her family of five children she paints, draws, and writes poetry with melancholic passion, while she lovingly cares for and nurtures her ever growing gardens of bonsai trees.

arts-of-hinterreiter.at | s.hinterreiter@eduhi.at

"Just as the wood has grown, thoughts grow about the picture." This is how Sonja often describes the delicate process of transforming her plates of pear wood into the thought-provoking artworks that decorate exhibitions and her own home alike. Socially critical sceneries co-exist with deeply introspective pieces of art. And while a lot of her work is often moving or downright distressing, one can find simplistic appreciations of our world and the people that inhabit it as well."

Hans Karelszoon Van Dijck

Hans Karelszoon Van Dijck studied printmaking at Sint-Lucas Academy of arts in Antwerp and RHoK-Academy in Brussels. His most important source for gaining more technical experience in printmaking, is his assistancy in the independent Studio of Czech masterprinter Rudolf Broulim, which he's been doing since he graduated. On top of this he worked with other specialist masters, such as Veerle Rooms in Belgium and Jeffrey Sipple (Tamarind institute) in the US. As an artist he's been doing several residencies in Belgium and abroad. His attraction to the northern part of Europe brought him to one of his favorites : Reykjavik, Iceland. Exhibitions are for him rather 'testcases' for experimenting with the way to show a certain theme that has been developed into a certain result than a search for commercial succes. This often results in exhibitions in less conventional spaces. Religion and Animalic nature are themes that are often more or less present in his graphic-based works and installations. Culture is something he tries to understand up untill today. A further development in Van Dijck's artistic curriculum is the use of dance and music/multimedia applications to create live performances out of which new works are conceived, in the form of independent (printed) works or installations. For a living he has worked for theatre (technician) and since a few years as a teacher of printmaking in RHoK-Academy and in Académie Royale des Beaux Arts both in Brussels.

BARTUNG oder Lithographic Beardings are on ongoing series of works about necessity to (re) create. Setting goals or rather 'rules' to keep the purest form creation up front or -as to sayhigh on the agenda. Necessity or better, extranecessity, is what the artist believes in to keep producing the energy to create in the nonsense of senseness. In other words, parameters are set to produce images at a regular interval; In this case the interval of bodily necessity, the trimming of its own beard at regular intervals to keep on holding the looks desired for some or many cultural factors to appear in public in some or another way. A simple but complex decision to shave your beard, keep it short or long. This contract to itself comprises no compromises. Every 14days to 1 month, the beard needs to be trimmed to keep life a living (for). Each time the urge to trim beard results in some artwork, containing a lithograph and video recording. These recordings are set to, result into fluid artworks yet to be filtered into a combination of lithographic bad prints and video recordings.

"With Pierre Vasic, art is from the outset enclosed in the object, in the immensely sensitive. He makes it possible for us to grasp it, to feel it, by displacing things, by shifting them into other temporal and spatial contexts, by exploring the folds of their corrosion, of their finitude. Then, all that remains is art: figuration becomes abstraction."

"30 years ago, I found a catalog of woodblock prints by Baselitz at a flea market. It impressed me so much that I wanted to learn the wood printing technique. At the beginning I tried to carve with a lot of force. After the third wooden plate, I realized that I prefer to make calm lines. I realize that my poetics include lines that sometimes run through the wood in a controlled manner or sometimes get lost/confused in space. I experiment with different materials."

Eliane Anghinah

Pintora, papeleira e gravadora, Eliana Anghinah Raicher possui em seu currículo diversos trabalhos no mundo das artes plásticas desde a década de 1970. Nascida na cidade de São Paulo, Eliana encontrou na natureza a matériaprima para a sua arte. Ela considera como uma de suas prioridades a utilização do papel como linguagem artística. Teve como uma das referências Evandro Carlos Jardim, com quem aprendeu gravura em metal. Na Faap, expandiu seus conhecimentos em desenho com a professora Amélia Toledo. Na Universidade de Arte Internacional de Veneza, na Itália, o pintor Mario de Luigi foi uma grande referência em estudos com pintura. Grande nome no meio das artes e referência importante no contexto artístico-cultural, a artista plástica italo-brasileira Maria Bonomi é uma de suas grandes incentivadoras do trabalho com papel. Em 1992, iniciou seus trabalhos com papel no ateliê experimental Francesc Domingo no Museu de Arte Contemporânea da Universidade de São Paulo. Em sua carreira, Eliana Anghinah participou de inúmeras exposições pelo Brasil e em outros países, entre eles República Tcheca, Bulgária, China e Portugal. No Japão, Eliana teve uma de suas experiências mais enriquecedoras: em 1996, um convite do artista Hata Yutaka a levou para uma vivência em uma vila (Imadate-cho) de produtores de papel feito à mão na província de Fukui; ali ela tem contato com o washi - papel tradicional japonês feito a partir de fibras vegetais. A experiência de dois meses e meio na fábrica de produção de washi serviu para que a artista pudesse apresentar suas obras com fibras de bananeira e ampliar definitivamente seus conhecimentos com o uso do papel. www.elianaanghinah.com.br

"O trabalho no Japão abriu espaço para o contato com a Iapma (International Association of Hand Papermakers and Paper Artists), instituição que reúne artistas, produtores e interessados em geral sobre a utilização do papel como forma de arte. Eliana também é membro- associada da North American Hand Papermakers (NAHP), com sede em Nova York. Atualmente, Eliana Anghinah desenvolve seus projetos artísticos em estúdio próprio, no qual o trabalho "Circulares" é um dos mais importantes."

"Eliane Santos Rocha's engravings are always created from an empty initial space, waiting for an irresistible impulse that will create a complex and expressive world. The artist's instinctive reason, under the imaginative stimulus of a first idea, creates a line that, animated by movement, will define the image. Eliane constructs her images with a procedure that has to do with the surrealists' well-known process of automatism. The final image gives his work a particular strength."

"Wood, carving, emptiness and sculpture. The most human of symbols: the texture of wood, the tree that we both slay and embrace. Since the dawn of time, from the firewood of ancient hearths to the charcoal of cave paintings. When I encountered woodcutting, as well as etching and aquatint, it was a rendezvous of techniques and emotions. Earth and charcoal pigments became my chosen hues. "My work reflects a path driven by a desire to establish multiple, open and diverse relationships between the artist and society, between art and life. I am interested in intercultural landscapes in a field of relationships that appeal to sensory, affective, individual and collective memory. My artistic practices are nourished by actions, stories and objects that come from the domestic world and from daily life. Through my work, I study the relationship between the body and its environment by exploring transition areas, notably between the inside and the outside, the individual and the collective, the intimate and the public, the real and the imaginary."

Migratory Pathways, 2017-2023

Printed political banners, basketwork, wood and steel. Migratory Pathways was originally created for Passages Insolites, a public art circuit design by EXMURO, Place Royal, Quebec City, Canada. The installation stages a procession of canoes seemingly interrupted in their levitating movement towards the river bank. Suspended in time and space, these woven boats allude to the legacies of Quebec folklore, sailors' legends and indig nous know-how. Their flock-like formation evokes the migratory conditions of humans and species who navigate change with vulnerability and resilience.

"I have come a long way to embark on an artistic synthesis whose concept is linked to the meanings of a personal search for an artistic aesthetic that invites the sharing of feelings. Therefore, alterity is also a keyword in my work, on various supports – engraving, print, photography, installation – to seek universal concepts. My conception is not hermetic; it is organic and versatile, sensory, and immediately felt, providing an effective aesthetic enjoyment for the public."

Sheila Goloborotko is a multidisciplinary artist who engages in a restless, relentless material practice that allows singular ideas to emerge in the guise of numerous artistic actions. Her work embodies a sensitive and faithful auto-ethnographic examination of contemporaneous issues as a form of resistance and poetic activism. Resulting works take symbols of intransience, impermanence, and stasis—natural systems, founding documents, language, and democracy itself—all changeable, shifting, active, unsettled. In an ideal merging of method and message, Goloborotko invites us into the chaos to find meaning and to engage in important questions about our relationship with nature, information, and one another. www.goloborotko.com | goloborotko@yahoo.com | @goloborotko

“My creative research focuses on print media as the graphic science of democracy—a tool that fosters community building and information sharing to create new socio-political ecologies. I investigate ways that feasibility, sustainability, and venture creation are the natural outgrowths of an ethical printmaking, grassroots-run, people-powered society. My practice and efforts serve as a bridge between individual mastery and community activism, exploring the shifting boundaries of the information age as it relates to multiples and collective Consciousness.”

“The Universe Picasso” is part of my graphic cycle “Pulsations”, which consists of 40 works. In the spontaneous and impulsive space, obtained from spilled and nuanced spots of black, brown and red, crossed with curves and straight lines, fit the collage images of dear to me and respected personalities – just like stars in the Universe. In this case, this is the great Picasso. His work is an example of destruction of the old techniques and stereotypes. Such is my credo about art in its various directions.”

"I have always made extensive use of text in my multi-layered screen prints. I have used words and letters like pieces in a game often scrambling or otherwise jumbling them in order to create some confusion and to initiate a re-thinking of what the words might actually be saying. This, I believe, is a reflection of the ways in which we are fed information by those in a position of authority and power. Information is often jumbled, fragmented politically biased and therefore misleading. Increasingly, I have been using texts in a more socio/political manner (sometimes jumbled and sometimes not) as a kind of commentary on the current state of the world. My work is attempting to provide the viewer with words and phrases for interpretation and reflection that will lay bare their own biases and personal points of view."

Chloé Beaulac is a Franco-Ontarian multidisciplinary artist residing in Québec, Canada. She holds a bachelor's degree in Fine Arts from Concordia University, specializing in printmaking. Her creative journey spans various mediums, encompassing photography, video, drawing, printmaking, painting, writing, installation, and sculpture, all employed to express her distinctive perspective on the world. Chloé Beaulac has achieved significant recognition for her work, including being nominated as a Cultural Ambassador and earning prestigious awards in printmaking and photography. She has showcased her art through a multitude of public projects, solo exhibitions, group exhibitions, and artist residencies, both in Quebec and on an international scale.

"The place of humankind within nature, the spirituality and imagery of the natural world, humanity's history as it is told, and hybrid symbolic and cultural identities are just a few of the topics that Chloé Beaulac addresses in her artistic practice. Much like an ethnologist, she explores various locations, observing and documenting social and cultural characteristics, history, myths, stories, rituals, and atmospheres that arise from her encounters. Utilizing her photographic documentation, drawings, and field notes, she interprets the images and information collected to blend them with her own personal iconography."

Professor Gerald Hushlak was born in Alberta where he continues his practice as a photographer, painter, and digital artist. After completing an MFA from the Royal College of Art, London, UK, Hushlak took up the position at the University of Calgary that has acted as the platform for his cross-disciplinary work in art and computer science. Hushlak has exhibited mural-size paintings in museums, built rapid prototype sculpture defined in a 3D modeling package titled Cinema 4-D, and plotted large lenticular and Giclee printed drawings derived from his evolutionary computing software. He uses evolutionary computing techniques (BreederArt) to “breed” digital imagery from his photographs. The art technology journal Leonardo featured his work as its cover story in the summer of 2007. Since the beginning of his art career, Hushlak has participated in 40+ oneperson exhibitions in public museums and art galleries and numerous group exhibitions. His most recent one-man exhibition was held at the Chentang Zhuang Art and Technology Museum in Tianjin, China in 2017.

“For decades my computers have evolved from traditional servants to symbiotic, creative partners. A high-resolution camera gathers digital input to begin creation of metaphorical iterative subjects via breeding combinations. Together we breed different suites of single unique drawings. Each input image has the capacity of generating its own appearance and aesthetic answer within the pathways of the parent program. This symbiotic process encourages the birth of a “wild card” that offers an unimagined departure point for building new design relationships. Like streams of water finding their path, the hybrid journeys collide and offer unimagined counterpoints to the machine’s predictability.”

She has had several solo exhibitions within Canada and internationally including Dream City, Dreams in Belgrade, and Shift at SNAP Gallery in Edmonton. She has exhibited widely in international group exhibitions that recently include The Okanagan Print Triennial 2018, Print/Pressure Field (Turkey), and the 2021 Print Club of Rochester International. "My own medical experiences have served as a catalyst to reflect on the complexities of patient experience and identity. While much of our knowledge of illness is framed through the biomedical lens, my work centers affect and the performance of daily life as significant sites of meaning in understanding chronic illness. I look at ways that we understand the body from both an experiential and medical perspective, and the complicated navigation of reconciling these ways of knowing."

Environmental protectionism, women's rights, spiritualism, artistic activism and the benefits of cultural diversity have been threads throughout Oakes' work. As a multidisciplinary visual artist living in BC Canada, she uses drawing, printmaking, painting, ceramics, glass, performance, installation and video. She has solo exhibitions at the Canadian Clay and Glass Museum, Swounds, 2010 and Awestruck Calendar of Ecology, 2015. SHESHE, a superlative take on the feminine consisting of an idealised domestic room, premiered at the Penticton Art Gallery, 2019 and showed in the duo exhibition SHE&SHE Jolanta Rudzka-Habisiak and Julie Oakes at TEST Galerie, Warsaw, 2020 and then at KOBRO Galerie in Lodz, Poland, 2021. Inspired to work with a smaller ecological foot print she recently exhibited eight floor-to-ceiling paper scrolls at ATAL609, Campinas, Sao Paulo Brazil, the entire exhibition transported in a golf bag.

"Her printmaking currently sources material from her daily habits, recycling with a performative aspect. Queen is a necklace of lino prints mounted on painted recycled plastic salad containers, the greens consumed as her lunches. Her veiled works Personal Chromatic Veil and The Tiger Claws Beneath the Gloves are made of hundreds of make-up monoprints on make-up pads each night turning a habitual material usage destined for the garbage into artworks."

"My work often takes place in or around water and depicts uncanny juxtapositions between body and nature or realism and dream. With an interest in philosophies of temporality, I'm particularly fascinated by the beach as a liminal or temporal space. I'm inspired by the invisible world and inner landscapes, spaces where time is stretched to infinity, where delicate shifts of light can create an eternity, and where sound goes beyond hearing."

Recent exhibitions include Resonance 2015 at the Shengzhi Art Centre in Beijing's 798 Art District in Beijing China, and the 2016, 2018, 2020 and 2022 International Academic Printmaking Alliance (IAPA) Exhibitions, in Beijing and Jingdezhen China. The exhibition Anthem: 15 Expressions of Canadian Identity at the Library of Alexandria in Alexandria Egypt as part of the 2022 International Book Biennial and at the Canadian Language Museum in Toronto Canada in 2023.

"Bovey's work searches the world of printed images and texts from the oceans of documents within and between cultures that are then combined with drawing inside the matrix. The images are simultaneously technological time markers, material culture and records of humanities rich, yet complicated past. The works sometimes look out into space, or inward to the imaginative world of speculation or find fascination with our microscopic universe beyond perception."

"I moved from an urban setting to living on a pastoral river's edge. My recent etchings are studies of the nature that surrounds me. I learn as I observe and create. I start my work with soft ground drawing to retain the immediacy of the mark making. I work to explore and exploit the unique qualities of etching on copper to further develop the image and to bring concept and process into balance. I use colour and Chine colle to create focus and variation on the paper surface. Piecing together the varied plates I compose a river diary."

"Drawn freehand directly on a computer and printed on an inkjet printer, my drawings do not contain photographs or scanned material. The subjects of my work may be interpreted as models for planned communities or aerial views of fictional suburbs. At the intersection of two approaches, mapping and landscape art, the drawings use a perpendicular viewpoint to combine the abstract qualities of maps with the descriptive powers of landscape art. Encouraging a reflective attitude by its distant viewpoint, the aerial view is used here to comment on society's transformation of the natural landscape."

"The Condition of Art in Society. Between horror and beauty. Art has always been crossed by the question about the relationship between Art and Reality, Art and Politics. After the Second World War, voices emerged postulating the end of Art or Poetry. Poetic speech would be impossible after the horror of war. However, the need for beauty today coexists with the most destructive and violent aspect in Society and Culture. In this series "The eclipse of an era" this tension between the destructive as a reality and the beautiful as an unattainable aspiration, in a planet eclipsed by the bestiality of armed conflicts, is present."

Recently he started to work mixing both traditional and new techniques. He is working currently in his workshop "Taller Prueba de Estado" which is arriving to 10 years and from he works to promote colective exhibitions in the field of expanded graphics. He has shown his works in several countries like: Cuba, Mexico, Ecuador, Peru, Spain, Portugal, Ireland, Portugal, Canada, Belgium, United States, Germany, Bulgaria, Netherlands, Japan, China among others.

"I have been a collector of images and objects, it is a fundamental part of the Corpus of my work; I like the possibilities offered by the graphic arts with its character of "multiplicity" which allows me to play with the images just as the diary diagraphmers did. My work is dispersed in the sense that it obeys what it calls me at a certain moment, I am interested in the process and what it can lead to. The printmaking has allowed me to explore the multiple image to take it to various contexts and find in them, or better propose, various readings."

"My work as contemporary printmaker focuses in linking both traditional disciplines and the new less toxic and sustainable practice of relief printing, of oil and watercolor inks of western and oriental tradition; intaglio technics of direct action without mordants; and hand printed lithography, replacing Nitric and Acetic acids with lemon juice and natural vinegar. "It is childish curiosity that guides me through life and informs my creative, artistic work. While living on a small island near Dubrovnik, I was captivated by the vast sky and its glittering stars. They were so vivid, unhindered by light pollution – a world seen both up close and from a distance. Then, there were the sea charts, mysteriously hinting at distant places, challenging to reach without comprehending complex navigational instructions. Whether exploring the Universe or the depths of the sea and its underwater realm, I endeavor, through various media, to approach the light and its source."

(Vlasta Gracin)

One might write below the title of the series "Restrained explosions", for the chaos that the picture also contains is as if it were restrained by multiple connections and brought to aesthetic form in which oppositions of light and dark, of strict linearism and background disorders are merged in a surprising and fascinating symbiosis. (Marti Rehkopp)

"My focus spans between organic and architectural visions. Better microscope cameras have revealed new worlds to humans and provided understanding of our world and all the underlying creations of it. On the other hand, my interest in architecture evolved when the wall broke down between East and West Germany and a lot of new interesting architecture arose with very interesting forms. Technical I explore the boundaries between digital and analog print techniques. My aim is to combine them to give a more modern approach to the graphic art scene."

“Havsteen-Franklin work explores the interwoven relationship between botanical and biological forms to reflect on the fragility and resilience of ecosystems and human life. During the etching process foul biting is encouraged on the copper plate to create a textured surface and a dialogue between the intentional drawn lines and random marks. The distinction between organic structures—be they human organs, plant life, or psychic contours—become fluid, fostering a surreal metamorphosis; creating a visual narrative that seeks to expand our engagement with nature and our own intrinsic interconnectedness with the world around us.”

"Ian Brown has a long-standing interest in the natural world and a forensic fascination with the mediating processes of photography and print. The scale, power and beauty of elemental interactions have often provided the imagery for his prints. Increasingly, concerns reflected in the prints, are directed at the impact on human populations as we disrupt and corrupt the planet's systems."

"I like to compose settings which are allegorical but also suggestive of real events and places. My screen prints, in particular are complex in construction and execution, involving many layers of ideas and ink. I use autographic and digitallymediated imagery and combine them through radical juxtaposition, cryptic clues and metaphor. I want to explore and communicate ideas and to intrigue, inviting my audience to join me in a search for personal and political meaning."

Margaret Ashman

Margaret studied Fine Art at the University of Hertfordshire and then took a Print-making MA at Brighton, graduating in 2005. She is a member of the Printmakers Council and Chaired it from 2011-2017. Often invited to take part in international print exhibitions, Margaret's work is in the following collections: Guangdong Museum of Art, China, Jiangsu Art Museum, China, Museum of Graphic Art, Split, Croatia, Shenzhen University, China, Guanlan Print Base, China, The Americas Biennial Exhibition of Contemporary Prints, Iowa, The University of Hertfordshire, The Ashmolean Museum, Hogan Lovells Law Firm, Citigroup, River Island, Whangeri Art Museum, Kent Print Collection, The Fitzwilliam Museum, The Kent Print Collection, Scarborough Museums Trust and the Victoria & Albert Museum.

"Margaret creates delicately coloured original prints based on gesture, dance and sign. The stillness and silence of the works is not accidental, it's often because her models are deaf. Each step or movement of arm, hand and body flows from a performer who speaks the visual language of sign. Whether signing or dancing without words, each gesture is intentional and resonant with hidden meaning. Ideas are developed digitally first and then made into metal plates in the workshop by a photo etching process. Margaret's preferred metals are steel and copper. She etches steel plates with nitric acid, sometimes reworking the plates with scrapers and abrasives to bring more light in the final image. The proofing stage on the press is a vital part of the creative process before the final print is realised. Layers of ink are sometimes added to create soft layers and unique marks by mixing and reworking. Each print is taken individually by freshly inking up the plate for each impression."

"Buildings that are asymmetrical, dynamic and outside the box, are intriguing. Presented with contrasts of form and colour, buildings interconnect with their environment. They interact with us visually. Some of my work shows the reflection of buildings that distort our 'real' space. Climbing atop buildings allow us to see additional buildings while we are unaware of where we are standing. My work investigates the landscape from different angles and how we relate to our environment."

“Let my prayer arise as incense before you, the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice...” (Psalm 141:2). Incense symbolises the love of God that he pours on us all, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, which spreads on the faithful as a good odour. A priest says when blessing the censer: „We offer you incense, O Christ our God, for an odour of spiritual fragrance. Receive it upon your heavenly altar, and send down upon us in return the grace of your all-holy Spirit”. I have used the smoke in my work, or rather the miraculously short moment that remains after the flame has been extinguished. There is a feeling that someone’s invisible hand is writing with smoke over the emptiness in fine calligraphy using different languages – maybe Hebrew, maybe Arabic or some other language.”

"Lines define my work. Lines connect, broaden one's mind and evoke movement. My art approaches the gestural abstraction and is from immediate natural origin. A certain light defines the expanses of the images – it enlightens and outshines the darkness of cosmic depths. The installations composed of enlightened acryl glass bars capture the space-consuming impulse. They resemble informal drawings of public space."

Monika Schaber is known for her experimental, large-format woodcut series, in which she works on the printing block with drills and other tools and then produces the prints herself by hand. The poetic and enigmatic dots can conceal harsh reality and political content, but also urban structures, open landscapes or a wide view into space. In installative arrangements, she relates her woodcuts, her objects and drawings to one another, thus opening up new associative spaces.

“When acid-resistant tusche is poured onto a copper plate, it creates a winding trail of self-organizing yet self-limiting patterns, seemingly repetitive but, in reality, infinitely variable. The final image gradually emerges through careful manipulation of this raw material —drawing, sketching, scratching, and more. Self-similar structures, occurring spontaneously in nature at both microscopic and macroscopic levels, serve as the foundation for the images in this limited edition series of aquatint etchings.”

"Human history is intertwined with the development of social fabrics and the creation of web-like grids which form a human, social, "super-organism" endowed with its own physiology and functions. My work It is a reference to Honoré de Balzac's work "La Comédie Humaine" (Human Comedy) it is a sarcastic commentary on the human condition, as we come to realize how little we are worth in the grand scheme of things, which subjugates us to its will, how alone we live and how truly we need the communication between people now days. I try to create a space which is the microcosm of my skin, in the sense of an identity code."

Zoe Tsipoti is a Digital Print Art Artist. She received a B.Sc. in Business Administration at Deree College in 1996 and graduated from Ornerakis School of Applied Arts in 1999. She acquired a variety of professional experiences: in the animation industry as a layout artist, 3D set modeler, production coordinator, and line producer for a Greek animation production company, in the field of illustration as a concept artist and art director, and in the design field as a designer of handmade artifacts. The accumulation of the above experience, together with the expertise she gained through her work in fine art, has resulted in her creation of a series of "Fine Art Prints" that are unique in concept and provide a different perspective to "Print Art" due to the technique of their digital creation, their thematic approach, and the approach of their presentation. www.zoetsipoti.com

"The way simple lines and shapes combine via a vector-based computer program, the clarity of the design, and the chosen thematic approach result in a poetic artistic outcome. The prints aim to intrigue the aesthetic interest of the viewer and evoke an emotional response. Since they are scalable and resolution-independent, they are printed sharp and crisp at any size, using technologically advanced digital printing techniques."

Emily Hung (b.1996, Shenzhen), based in Hong Kong, graduated from The Chinese University of Hong Kong with a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts. Her obsession with refined details dates back to her earliest childhood, she finds the beauty in lines unique and fascinating. Even though working on great details, she does not stick to a set of rules painstakingly. Through meticulous printmaking and etching on copper plates, she is dedicated to delivering the beauty of lines. With delicate lines and tonal gradations in intaglio prints, Emily Hung imagines herself as animals in folktales, and extends the destinies of these animal gods.

“Oona Hyland’s work Active Forgetting highlights an institutional massacre which took place in Irish Mother and Baby Homes and Magdalene Laundries, between 1922 and 1998. This work is an exploration of insidious trauma from both a personal and political viewpoint. Active Forgetting is concerned with the power of trauma, which can be intergenerationally transferred. It does not fade and can haunt the children of survivors. The unspoken grief of minority subjects is another concern. Erasure is an important theme in this project and integral to the material process of production. Active Forgetting consists of experimental works, realised primarily through print, but also through film and alternative photography processes such as Cyanotype. Hyland’s film Touching Time is made in collaboration with Anna Viola Hallberg. Hyland is concerned with ideas of ‘otherness’, marginalisation and the scapegoat, and the legacy of betrayal involving both people and institutions of the state (as Hannah Arendt would say the ‘banality of evil’). Active Forgetting explores these ideas, not to illustrate them but to embody them through the process of making.”

"All my work is inspired by the nature that surrounds me, by the sensations and feelings it arouses. The engraving technique helps me a lot in developing the chosen theme or in discovering new, unexpected forms. In addition to engraving on metal plates, I find xylography very congenial as it makes my work with glazes, shades, overlays and colour. Working with wood gives the sensation of treating a living, warm material that becomes the protagonist of the work created."

Dream of a Queen

"Reinterpretation of Caterina Cornaro's portrait by Tiziano, 1542, Galleria degli Uffizi, Florence. Tiziano's work is split up so that it appears to the eyes as a language of signs and symbols belonging to a dreamlike world, rendering in this way the "illusion of a reign" which characterized the historical figure of Caterina. The crown is not worn, the details of the dress recall the waves of the sea separating Cyprus from Venice, the woman's eyes, though of the golden color of nobility, are veiled, a curtain which, in the same way as in a theatre, hints at the role of queen Caterina is called to perform by Doge Barbarigo."

"In his artistic research he focuses his interest in a metaphorical reality aimed at venturing to mysterious worlds. The staging of these worlds runs through a completely special narrative structure. The logic of events seems to be driven by an expressive mode, by using emblematic images which may evoke figures arising in the unconscious of the human soul."

"...Each sheet contains a world. A world which in Remo Giatti's graphic work is limited to the perimeters of creation, but opens up in depth, making the value of these techniques perceptible: the superposition of signs to form a reality made of time and space. I would like to add that, in the case of Remo Giatti, this reality is also made up of joy and pain. Joy inherent in the creative act and pain that arises from the current human condition. In fact, in the watermark of each of his works, the aspiration that aims to express and reconcile creative happiness with the drama of being is drawn."

"I traveled to various regions, and before I knew it, I had visited more than 70 countries in all regions, including South America, the Middle East, and Africa, and I had also dived into oceans around the world to conduct research. From these, the TRAVEL series began. I had many encounters during my travels. From these encounters, he began producing copperplate prints. The technique is one of corrosion copperplate printing and photoengraving, but a special technique was chosen to create paper lithography from a photograph and transfer it to a copper plate. The original form of the photograph collapses due to deep corrosion, and the original form that has collapsed from deep corrosion is dug up and rebuilt into the form he desires, and this process of breaking and building is perhaps the result of his own sense of form that he finds through the repetition of these processes. As a creator, I would like you to see the heart-warming moments and moving world view of the unknown realm of corrosion.

"Cognitions of Molecular Biology are showing that biological processes are determined by laws of Physics and Chemistry same as planetary orbits. An experiment, in which patient are subjected to brain surgery in conscious state, shows how patients, under influence of electrical stimulus to certain parts of brain, are being provoked to lift up leg or arm or to move lips and even speak. One can hardly say that we have free will when our behavior is also determined by laws of physics. We are nothing else then a BIOLOGICAL MACHINE and FREE WILL is just an illusion. With series of drawings and installations Artist engages himself in the search for New Human. What is and where is what we commonly call human, and do we need a new definition of it or so desperately. He leaves us question about numerous possibilities and impossibilities of the world we inhabit and the one we don't. His art is based and inspired with contemporary scientific discoveries. Artist is experimenting with art methods, and one could say that his method is The Experiment itself. His loyalties lies with the science and its struggle to reach always more and more. He left us with numerous question revealed, we are lured into zero point with coordinates spreading infinitely in all directions; in the unknown of micro and macrocosms."

"What is very important for me about the "print" is not a narrative of the "picture", not printmaking skills, not technical knowledge, but thinking in a "printmaking way". Why do I want to print an etching or a woodcut? Do I create the print, or I use a print, a "printmaking way" to express my idea, create my art, create my art installation?"

"Sylvie K. provokes it and plays on the tactile by directly attacking the materiality of the paper with her stitching. This direct engraving process, at the limits of print-making, applied in the "flag star IIIIII" series, raises the stitched points, making them palpable and calling on the viewer to touch, asking for a reaction beyond contemplation. The result is an optical quality in the white and purity of the paper through the light captured and the shadow produced."

“Throughout my career, I have explored my everyday life through images, focusing on graphics and printmaking. This practice allows me to experiment with different approaches in terms of media, dimensions, and objectives. The images I create reflect urban reality, delving into aesthetics, construction processes, and specific elements of the landscape. I consistently discover new reasons to work within the city, gaining understanding and letting go of certainties. The printmaking technique enables me to exhibit my pieces simultaneously in various locations. Additionally, I engage in collaborative projects that encompass diverse sectors of the population, involving territorial movements and sharing my expertise in printmaking.”

Marianne Sadowski is a visual artist and art educator born and raised in Mexico City. She lives and works currently in Southern California. Living between Mexico, Germany and the US has shaped the way she understands the world from different angles and cultures. The use of grid-like compositions in her printmaking and mixed media artworks, serve as an abstract organizing system of thought. Using multiples and grids becomes a metaphor for a quest of her understanding of the world through variable pieces. Her artworks reflect her socially engaged art practices evolving along themes of social justice, migration, climate change, nature and time. Her art has been exhibited nationally and internationally (The Museum of Contemporary Art, Oaxaca, Mexico, The National Museum of Mexican Art in Chicago, Museo de la Estampa, Mexico, Los Angeles International Airport, Taller Boricua, New York, KuBa Germany, University of Notre Dame, Indiana, Mexic-Arte Museum, Austin, Texas, El Camino College, LA, SPARC, LA, Self Help Graphics, LA, Scuola Internazionale de la Grafica, Venice, Italy, among others). She has been an active member of print collectives in Los Angeles. She serves and has served as a board member in Printmaking Networks such as the Los Angeles Printmaking Society, Consejo Gráfico Nacional and Self Help Graphics Artist Board. Sadowski has been teaching art for over 25 years in different Museums, Schools and non-profit organizations.

"I am drawn to the process-based quality of printmaking which sometimes serves as a foundation in my work for layering drawing and mixed media. In this process of layers and grid systems, I process my thoughts and draw connections and associations to try to reflect the complexity of understanding the present world we live in."

“The interest for the grotesque in my work as a mode of graphic representation, distorts and disfigures natural forms in which human features can be seen through the animal metamorphosis. The last linoleographic series, the research be consider an exploration of the human condition or what it is to be human or machine, in the context of contemporary society as a metaphor of the lack of balance between technological and spiritual development as well as the destruction of their natural environment. The creatures could stand for persons in our visible world or stand symbols for the symptomatic change in human behavior under the reign of technology.”

"Bert's art has been affected by his research activities insofar as the often-tedious discipline needed in research is also used in his art; obtaining the final image is like a research goal. He explored several printmaking techniques, intaglio (etching, drypoint and mezzotinting) as well as wood- and linoleum cuts and sometimes even combined intaglio and woodcut in a same image."

"We, Josée Wuyts and Frans de Groot, both graphic artists, worked together since 1990 in the Netherlands. We used various techniques, such as etching, woodcut, linocut and dry point. Each work contains elements of both artists. Our work could be big or small. Along the years we had several themes. Working together is based on confidence and respect. Our prints were growing slowly but steady. We liked to spend a lot of time in our studio, meanwhile our prints travelled all over the world and were exhibited in several biennials and triennials. A few times we were honoured. On 23-01-2023 Frans de Groot suddenly died. Our interesting oeuvre stays and I - Josée Wuyts - try to show it to graphic art lovers."

"If life is to be on the move, travelling would be my reality and belief... Long time ago, 3 caravels discovered, by chance, a new continent after a long trip on the ocean... And still following straight away, it looks like to be back but to another world, somewhat diverse from the older one... What is today? It is really elsewhere? I am living on earth ...and even in progress, I should not know everything. So, I am simply going on, living by myself and creating new universe, new continents out of my heart and thoughts... but and certainly... I should not know everything. I am forever. So and at last, if I am feeling to be a continent relating to the stars, I could give it to you, at your desire."

"I create layered paintings and works on paper that reflect the complexity of the world. I do not literally comment on reality, but create an equivalent by giving space to natural processes in paint and making resolute interventions in them. The alternation of control and chance, of rule and surrender, attack and acceptance leads to a energy-charged whole. By deploying opposing forces in my work, I distil meaning and beauty from friction."

"Working with digital and traditional intaglio techniques Mark Graver's work explores notions of memory, place and time. The traces of time etched into the environment, be it natural or urban, external or internal, personal, historical or shared; the surfaces making up a city, a place, or the forms of nature, observed, remembered, recorded and abstracted. The works are layered, much in the way memories are - things come to the fore, emerge then disappear."

"Through a catabole, an eruption, the world arises with matter; it is the basis of everything that follows. But at first the sidereal system, in the orbiting of the celestial bodies around themselves and against each other, is stretched into a spatial and temporal infinity in relation to the following natural processes. The sidereal system is not placed in space and time, but spans infinite space and is the "master of time" in its eternal cycle." (Schelling, Exposition of the Process of Nature, X: 323, 329) Arché terra nostra is a graphic object, which is intended to connect individual images that combine to form a unity through light and space. The object is both a matrix as well as a print that changes depending on the viewer's angle of view and reveals every detail of the surrounding space and even the viewer himself."

"My current realizations can be described as free constructions of three-dimensional objects and installations, with a form depending mostly on the space they are annexing. The same elements can be re-used multiple times in subsequent realizations - depending on the specific situations or needs. Printmaking objects created in such a manner produce brand new forms, and - what follows - brand new messages each time, relying on many (subjective and objective) factors, which determine their final value."

"Art is a space of freedom. This sacred space - during the current global tensions and growing world conflicts, such as overpopulation, and increasingly scarce food, water, and air. Environmental pollution, epidemics, pandemics, and wars contribute to the fact that we hold our breath more and more often. Depopulation and migration of people for various reasons contribute to the specter of an increasingly difficult modernity. Art starts from human life's material and psychological aspects in specific times and contexts. The main theme is based on contemporarily as a source of inspiration and a starting point for new visions of the world. Works aims to analyze contemporary human lives and behaviors, the relationship between man and urban/natural background, and the historical issue that is present. I am interested in the contemplative dimension of the presented work. The meditation about the daily contact between humankind and contemporary phenomena is always an object of artistic investigation. The world, its global image, and its vision force us to reflect on what will happen in the next 10, 50, 100 years. What will remain of us.... What will remain for the next generation?"

At the age of 12 years, his visual arts teacher discovered his talent and sent him to the School of Fine Arts in Ponce where he was accepted. Upon graduating from the Bernardino Bernard Vocational High School in photolithography and visual arts from the School of Fine Arts of Ponce, he pursued a Bachelor's Degree in Visual Arts Education at the Interamerican University of San German. Jose distinguishes himself among his and through a group exhibition he exhibits one of his works at the Museo de Arte de Ponce. Years later, he obtained a Master's Degree in Fine Arts with a minor in Painting, although he also had the opportunity to have a mentor and Puerto Rican artist Mr. Fernando Santiago. In his training as a painter, he was mentored by the Puerto Rican artist Jaime Carrero. The artist Carrero saw in Jose a new vision in his works, considering his work at that time as one of social criticism and post surrealism. Since then, he has participated in several collectives and biennials in Puerto Rico, New York, Colombia, Spain and Portugal along with several local and international artists as he did with his colleague and visual artist Arnaldo Roche. He currently works for the Puerto Rico Police in the Criminal Investigations' Unit where he uses forensic photography as part of his work.

"His works have evolved in his 27 years of career. Being known among his colleagues as the artist of sheep with extremely human faces. With a satirical and black humor context to one of more magical realism vision taking the social and evolutionary context of today's contemporary society. His works have been liked for their originality, playfulness, giving freshness and spontaneusness to current topics. From small and collective rooms, Jose has become known internationally, giving way to being able to exhibit at the Douro Portugal Biennials for 2 years in a row, standing out for his unique engravings. With the goal of being recognized worldwide, Jose has set out to conquer the world of art through his talent in various media, not only as a painter but also as a Puerto Rican engraver."

"Defining the link between printmaking, drawing, memory, time, and seeing how this influence my images, is highlighting how fundamental the engraving technique has been for me. These works give importance to paper as a traditional support and multi-exemplarity. Using the silk aquatint technique, I explore the pictorial possibilities in printmaking. These images are printed through the press and then the paper returns to the support where the image begins to be built, the plastic."

"The fascination with urban translation or displacements, intervened landscapes, the life conceived in each of them concludes in an internal reflection on the passage of time. The transformation of inhabited spaces, the visual representation of the human being of the environment that surrounds him, the preservation of memories and the different perspectives of human thought. They are combined and materialized through the appropriation of cartographic elements to compose urban landscapes, as well as grids, colors, frameworks that make up imaginary geographies or the recreation of maps that do not go anywhere. These elements used in her body of work are the result of explorations and trips to different cities."

"Woodcut is an expansion of myself, my alphabet of expression. In the creative process, for me, the print is as important as the act of making the matrix. The matrix is not a mere image, but the element that generates it. Woodcut is liberation, the externalisation of my inner self, it doesn't involve repetition but constant mutation and expression."

"My works are made on the base of metamorphosis, recurring to the use of antropomorphisms, zomorphisms, and mechanomorphisms, in order to obtain the transfiguration of the images, giving them multiple possible readings. Symbiotic ambiguous figures, mix of beings, humans, animals and machines in constant transformation. For that reason, their titles have in the end !? The creatures resulting from this creative process are organised in a functional mythological world, on a deep and timeless space. They are figures in a clear or a dark space, and between them exists a non dialogue, sphinx figures closed in themselves, in their worlds."

“The digital drawings are inspired by technical images captured by satellite of the various storms that systematically devastate certain regions and, according to scientists, some of these storms are a consequence of climate change. Visually, I am interested in recording these telluric moments as forces in movement and in transition. Regarding the social consequences of these storms, an intensive and massive displacement of populations is expected to seek other places to live. In response to this situation, a large number of countries are opting to build barriers and heavily guarded borders.”

“There are several aspects on the prints that make the interest of such a medium to this type of work. To take time and observe, soaking in what’s around us, developing intimacy. It is a way of experiencing reality that is deeply human and powerful. At the same time the technical intricacies turn the print into a construct, emphasizing its material existence, one that endures time, also in the way of being reproducible...”

Marcela Manso was born in Aveiro in July 1980. She has a college degree in Sculpture from FBAUL since 2005 and has been an associate of Contraprova - Atelier de Gravura (Printmaking Studio) since 2014. Since 2015 she has been a teacher at Contraprova. She also works as a freelance art teacher and illustrator, in addition to continuing to develop her artistic work in engraving and other techniques. She studied at the Faculty of Fine Arts in Brno in 2004 (Erasmus program) and lived in Stuttgart, Germany, where she began her journey and apprenticeship in engraving in 2007. She has exhibited regularly since 2003 in national and international exhibitions and since 2013 she has participated in all group exhibitions at the Contraprova studio and in the studio's different projects and activities. She is represented in Vila Real de Santo António, at the Saint Petersburg State Artistic Industrial Academy, Russia and at the Mcpherson gallery in Auckland, New Zealand and in private collections in Brazil, India, United Arab Emirates, Spain, Germany and Portugal.

"The prints made by Marcela Manso revolve around symbols, memories, feelings, sometimes with a drop of irony and humor, sometimes with a more poetic concern. Also because of her concern about the environment and curiosity about mixing media, many plates are with unconventional materials, sometimes with old metal plates, taking advantage of what time made to them and working with the mark they already have, assuming what somebody else would consider a mistake and exploring it, adjusting an idea of a drawing or an abstraction to these "mistakes."

“The complexity of the engraving processes, on printing items, contact, matrix, material, picture, are not only of retinal, technical, material, or of materializing order, it leaves us in suspense about any rushed conclusion on this matter, by giving preference to a superficial look at what the print raises, going no deeper and understanding the physical and timeless horizons in its scope.”

Silvestre Pestana

1949

Born in Funchal, Silvestre Pestana (1949-) holds a degree in Graphic Arts and Design from ESBAF and a master's degree in Art and Design Education from De Montford University. He was a professor at the School of Education of the Polytechnic Institute of Coimbra. His work is distinguished by the radical nature of interventions that, from the very beginning, rely on intentional hybridism resulting from the interplay and permutation between linguistic and nonlinguistic signs. The contamination that emerged in the 1960s and 70s from the use of diverse graphic materials found support in the use of video and computer media in the 1980s. At this level, it can be said that his computer poetry opened new directions for experimental poetry. By frequently and intentionally mixing issues related to materiality and mediation, his work combines procedures based on digital systems with analog representation. His recent works in the field of performance, in real or virtual spaces like Second Life, are essential to assess how experimental practices interact with the social practices they articulate with. His work was featured in an exhibition in the Nas Escritas PO.EX cycle (Povo Novo Virtual, 2013). His interventions during the Sufoco-Inter-mundos-Drones V cycle in 2014 at Espaço Mira, Porto, are also noteworthy. He co-organized the First Virtual Second Life Cerveira Biennial (PT) with Celeste Cerqueira during the XVII Biennial in 2013. In Lisbon, he presented the work Sufoco (Galeria Múrias e Centeno, 2015). He was one of the honored artists during the III moment of the Biennial of Maia_2015, with the notable installation Vertigem 04: sociedade aberta. The exhibition Silvestre Pestana: Tecnoforma, curated by João Ribas in 2016, was the first major exhibition dedicated to Silvestre Pestana's work at the Museum of Contemporary Art of Serralves. The following year, he presented Breathless at the Bloom Projects Exchanges Series at the Museum of Contemporary Art of Santa Barbara, California, in partnership with Uma Certa Falta de Coerência. He recently participated in the exhibition of Portuguese Experimental Poetry, CAIXA Cultural Brasília, Brazil, in 2018, with the support of the Embassy of Portugal in Brasília.

Avatares & Drones

"A problemática apresentada pela polivalente série "Avatar & Drones" (2010-2021), pressupõe o reconhecimento, da importância dos novos dispositivos de visualização digital e a sua subsequente imagética, sendo esta exercida e intensamente divulgada junto da geração millenials, através das múltiplas interações, intensamente recorrentes nos videogames participativos globais. Estes espaços virtuais, apresentam-se como uma homologia de um real ficcionado, que permite a produção original de deslumbrantes ambientes e cenografias, reafirmando a validade projetiva das instalações 3D, tão acarinhadas pelos artistas do século XXI. Assim o AVATAR, ou corpo digital social, assume uma identidade própria de um heterónimo (à maneira da premonição da multiplicidade de sujeitos intensamente exemplificada na obra de Fernando Pessoa). O avatar, enquanto simulação ficcionada, pode exercer um poder de contextualização histórica e reapropriação crítica de um Modo de Ser!"

"TERRAS RARAS" (2023), é um poema expandido, apresentado por 7 Led Display no Museu do Côa, que integrou a XI Bienal de Gravura Douro, 2022, sendo dedicado ao poeta Omar Khouri (Brasil), estudioso da Poética do Pós – Verso. A sua leitura, enquanto Poética da Escrita Luminosa de baixa resolução, apresenta um registo de escrita animada, intensamente líquida e em contínua renovação lumínea. A sua utilização massiva, anuncia os novos modos da comunicação superlativa nas emergentes Smart Cities. Esta, enquanto, escrita luminosa, revela-se, intensamente elétrica, caracterizando-se principalmente por se disponibilizar em visualizadores operativos nas autoestradas, hospitais, aeroportos, painéis de comando e nos videogames.

Portuguese Architect & Artist who has decided to “merge” her architectural long experience with an artistic universe, related to a different way of looking at the territory, working and exploring its huge pictorial potential. Work as an Artist, until now, was like her second career. Her first one, was 30 years of Architecture practice (www.opera-projects.com), but this new “Path” has gradually dominated her activity, being at the present, her main motivation. Her Artistic work pretends to build a juxtaposed narrative of layers, textures, colors, scales, allowing another perception of the territory, a process through which “Nature” reaches a new dimension, becoming ART. tereza.ribeirodecastro@gmail.com | terezacastro.com

“This approach implicitly has a universal appeal to the awareness that our Planet is finite and depends on us ALL, message emphasized through the “Universal Power of ART”, as a Universal language. The themes incorporated into her artistic approach, mainly, have a strong connection to the “transformation/deterioration” of our Planet, by the negative action of man, such as: -Massive agriculture / Irrigation Fields -River’s path, pollution and distortion - Mining / Oil exploration and contamination /...or, in an opposite approach, reflects a “Tribute” to the formal and pictorial richness of our Planet.”

"In the beginning, I had a conceptual vision that allowed me to integrate the figurative. Currently, I work in the area of the abstract, but the approach to the themes has remained tributary to conceptualism, perhaps not in essence, only formally. I was born with inspiration. The ideas combine organically with the form that I feel deeply. I am a person with many ideas, which forces me to work quickly. When I was practicing classical engraving techniques, I realized the futility of manual work and the waste of ideas, which disappeared because of the time given to technical elaboration. Digital art allows me this speed."

"My art merges my own memories, mystery and mysticism, blurring reality and fantasy. I would like to create a refuge for myself and the viewer. Surreal elements and symbols as time, space, infinity, dreams inspired by the reality evoked in memories, inviting viewers on a captivating journey. I reflect my memories with a surrealistic expression in a story telling way. I mostly create colored etchings using a special single print technique, which leads to very limited editions of unique prints. The intensive colors of my etchings combined with the graphic lines, invites for a dialog between painting and graphic art."

"Original idea in this project is based mainly on the basic principles of composition, where drawing and color are the main carriers. By researching and deepening the topic, the scope of interest soon expanded, and in addition to the basic idea, new symbolic and contextual values are created and supplemented. The mountain motif on the newly created works is a logical sequence of the previous works and constitutes an essential fragment of the previous whole."

“The work of the visual artist Martin Ševčovič (*1983) has been moving since its beginnings in the interfaces of classical and experimental author’s graphics with overlaps into the object. The thematic frameworks of his work go back to the principles of the cycle of life and death, while generating the language of processual non-subject art by his own way, using the expressive structural peculiarities of the language of contemporary art.” (Vrbanova, 2021, p. 6)

"In many ways I aim to 'rewrite' history in my work and the dominant sense of self-awareness that informs most Western art practices. I am trying to present contemporary issues such as Difference as timeless, by situating my vocabulary of images and themes in an organic flux of dreams, history, news, commercial detritus, hyper-reality, and unvoiced feelings and forces of biological nature/ desire. I aim to stay clear of any literal explanations of my work and believe that no work of art or "visual text" is ever complete. The ongoing input by viewers, as well as the debate between the viewer and the artist, keep on adding new meaning to the artist's original concept and will continue to enrich the artwork."

It consists of hundreds of layers and is output as a final combined layer A video edited using the same image method was also exhibited in a solo exhibition. The theme of the exhibition focuses on the relationship that individuals have with society, and the meaning and existence value of each individual's self is a fragmentary image of a phenomenon in society."

"Sight, an important sense. Look at the most important thing we can do in that sense. By adding curiosity we can begin to understand the fact of creation. Engraving is not a direct or easy process, it is composed of silence, curiosity and the capacity for introspection. Achieve understanding, the deep self that leads us to express loneliness, fear, hate or love... Any feeling that will ultimately make up our work."

Ariadna Abadal Lloret is a biologist and printmaker. Since 2012, she has been working as a Manager and Printmaking Technician at the Art Print Residence, a printmaking residency founded by her family. She is a master professor of mokulito, photoetching, and electroetching. As a printmaker, she is also familiar with traditional printmaking techniques such as etching, aquatint, drypoint, soft ground, collagraph, and mokuhanga. In 2019 she conducted a workshop in Québec and taught a two-week course at Joan Miró's Foundation on Mallorca Island. She is always in search of non-toxic printmaking techniques and she is offering classes on Japanese Lithography on wood (also called mokulito) and other printmaking methods at the Art Print Residence (<https://artprintresidence.com/>). Recently, she's participated in international biennials and exhibitions such as "Dwell, Pause for thought: Investigating the process of printmaking" at McColl Center in the US, "XI Biennial of Douro" in Portugal, "Impact 12" in the UK, and the "International Mokuhanga Juried Exhibition" in Japan. She has also participated in several exhibitions in Australia, Armenia, Bulgaria, France, Italy, Serbia, Romania, and Taiwan. She has been awarded the prize "Mircea Ionescu-Quintus" at the "Iosif Iser" International Contemporary Engraving Biennale ed. XV (2023). She got the Second Mention at Miniprint Cantabria (2021), and two Honorable Mentions at the Awagami International Mini Print Exhibition (2023 & 2021).

"In my artwork, nature is my inspiration. I usually refer to the sea, the forest, plants, and animals. From my point of view, since we are aware of the fragility of the ecosystems, we should reconsider our artistic practices in order to protect the environment and ourselves. I like to work with organic materials, such as wood. For that reason, I'm in love with woodcut, mokuhanga, and the mokulito process. I cherish using Japanese handmade papers for printing and sometimes I prepare my own pigments. Ariadna Abadal is also developing a collaborative project with artist Teofil Androne called "The Ocean Wave Project" in which the mokulito matrixes, after the printing process, are transformed into surf boards (<https://theoceanwaveproject.wordpress.com/>)."

Natural elements blossom almost unwillingly in most of my art pieces. I like to pay attention to those unexpected details that might go unnoticed otherwise. The past is always present. I bring the past back in the topics I choose and how I work with them. Paper and metal, the essential materials for engraving, have developed their own separate way of communicating, creating unique unrelated pieces that have transformed my art over the years.

Born in Stockholm, Sweden, in 1958, I presently reside and work in the northern region of the country. My professional journey, steeped in the realm of visual arts, has spanned since 1997, where I have immersed myself in various printmaking techniques, both traditional and experimental. Between 2001 and 2005-2008, I assumed the role of head teacher, overseeing the printmaking program at two art schools in Sweden. Beyond my commitment to printmaking, I am actively involved in art and exhibition projects. My endeavors extend to writing and photography assignments focused on the art domain, with my contributions consistently finding a place in art websites and publications. In acknowledgment of my artistic contributions, I received a one-year working grant in 2018 and a two-year grant in 2019 from The Swedish Arts Grants Committee. Presently, my creative focus revolves around the project titled "Northern Sweden's Inland and Mountain Areas", where I aim to explore and encapsulate the essence of these regions through my artistic lens.

"The graphic imprint is fascinating, as is the depth in surfaces and lines. A piece of photographic reality is often crucial in my images, regardless of the graphic techniques I work with. Hopefully, my pictures convey something about the state of current life, perhaps not directly but indirectly."

“In an age of ever more perfect machine and digital reproducibility of all printed matter, I do not strive for the usual goal of all printing processes to produce the highest possible edition of identical prints. "My fascination with communication is often based more the idea of subtext. Understanding can vary between people: from slight divergences of emphasis to an entirely opposite inference. The Janus body of work uses contronyms –words that simultaneously carry opposite definitions. The title references the Roman god whose job was to help people navigate from one state to another. It serves as a cautionary admonishment to consider different frameworks as a necessity for true understanding."

Friedhard Kiekeben

Yun, 2023
Digital Print
180 x 180 cm

Having graduated from the Royal College of Art, London, in 1993, the German-born artist currently lives and works in Chicago. Kiekeben's works take form as digital wall drawings, metal friezes, paintings/overpaintings, and sequences of original prints. Projects often play on a minimalist and reductive cut-and-paste aesthetic and include many printed, tailor-made, site-specific, or public installations — such as 'Cascade', 'Quantum Ice', 'Loop', 'Crystal', or 'Tourbillon' — these have been exhibited internationally in private and public galleries and museums since the mid 1980s. Friedhard Kiekeben has his studio in Chicago and is a tenured Professor of Fine Art at Columbia College Chicago. The image shows a site specific wall drawing 'Yun (lime)', that is part of a solo show at the Springer Art Center in Champaign, IL, in November/December 2023.

www.art-well.org

'Yun' is a larger series of projects and art processes across printmaking, painting, and installation that will be explored at a variety of venues over the next four years. The process starts with cloudlike, undulating vector drawings that are drawn with stylus on a touch-screen computer, resulting in a basic archive of several hundred 'cloud' (Yun) shapes. The drawings are both concrete and clearly delineated as well as ethereal and diffuse, all at once, like a cloud. These drawings are then edited into fully fledged artwork and experiences, both on smaller scale, such as photopolymer intaglio or drypoint prints 'Yun', or overpaintings, as well as in immersive wall works that respond to the specifics of unique gallery spaces, such as the piece shown in Champaign IL in 2023.

"The subject of fashion gives endless inspiration for printmaking in dry point etching, monotype and linocut. Monotype particularly fascinates as it creates an image from ink as it does in painting and is often referred to as the "painterly print." Portraits of fashion designers, vintage fashion and fashion models show different aspects of the fashion world. Starting always from a drawing and adding hand colored tinting or additional textures with ink and chine colle highlight the different aspects of social identity created by fashion's changing world."

Flynn’s drawing skills are ever-present and her iconic imagery leave room for the viewer’s imagination to define the work. She considers her best pieces to be those that are the least planned. "This body of work has evolved into layers. It is a progression of manipulated photos, hand drawn images, painted or printed shapes, and vector drawings that become edited by the destructive nature of laser energy. "The rich hues and versatility of pigment printing opens the way for a printmaker who is also a painter to experiment, synthesize and realize new exciting visual scenarios. Images can be created with the use of digital painting and drawing applications, photographs of interest including segments of the artist's paintings. These elements can be merged and reconstructed into new scenarios which are printed with pigment inks on either archival paper, canvas or other treated substrates."

"In my artistic journey, printmaking serves as a channel for expressing the depths of my soul and mind through a rich tapestry of techniques and artistic horizons. Texture stands as the unifying thread weaving through all my creations, flowing seamlessly from metal drypoint to a myriad of etching methods, linocut, collagraph, and even the Japanese technique of mokulito, which involves lithography on wood. Whether in white, black, or a symphony of colors, the impact of the finished works varies, each telling a unique story of my artistic exploration."

J. Field 2018

Post retirement as a chartered civil engineer and local authority chief officer I undertook formal art study. I have an HND, and an MA in printmaking from the University of Wales in 2011. Early successes included exhibition in Hunting Art Prizes 2004, Triennial Open Print RWA 2004, Originals 05 Mall Galleries and Welsh Artist of the Year Exhibitions, 2005 and 2006. Subsequently, I have exhibited in a number of international and national exhibitions of prints and artists' books. Latterly, for three years I was an art volunteer at Dorset County Hospital in the UK. From April to June 2018, I made artists' books from stories given me by patients together with a series of prints – I had a solo exhibition in 2018. The books were exhibited by the University of the West of England in the spring 2019.

"I am interested in "narrative" – currently working on a "portrait" of my home village with portraits, landscapes, and artists' books – print, paint, and mixed media."
